Slight Design Change

December 18th, 2004

Out of boredom and desire to tinker with Photoshop, I've made a slight design change. Please let me know what you think, and if you see any anomalies.

Favored Freeware: Mactracker

December 18th, 2004

> Mactracker provides detailed information on every Apple, Motorola, PowerComputing, and UMAX Mac OS computer ever made, including items such as processor speed, memory, optical drives, graphic cards, supported Mac OS versions, and expansion options. Also included is information on Apple mice, keyboards, displays, printers, scanners, digital cameras, iPod, AirPort Base Stations, Newtons, and Mac OS versions.

Pros: Mactracker is the complete tome of knowledge for anyone who researches, sells, or is generally curious about all Apple and cloned Apple products. The current version is available for Mac OS 8-X and Windows. There is also an iPod version available.

Cons: There is no database update function. The Mactracker database is updated only when a new version of Mactracker is released.

Excuse for Speeding

December 17th, 2004

I wonder if the CHP will accept this as an excuse for speeding?

xmlrpc.php in v1.2.1

Ok, so I've read that xmlrpc.php had been removed in v1.2.1, but I've also read that this was a mistake. What's the real deal? I went through and deleted all my xmlrpc.php files and they still haven't been added back into the distribution (assuming that removing it really was a mistake). If it really was a mistake, when will it be added back into the distribution, or will there be separate download?

Have you searched the forums for a possible solution ?

That's not a bug, that's an error message.

You have to go to /wp-admin/install.php first. Have you done that?

New Support Team representative

Another item from the 2015 Community Summit is that James Huff (@macmanx) is now the new Support Team representative. I will act as his backup and provide assistance and coverage as needed.

Due to prior commitments I haven't been able to spend the time I think is required to correctly represent the Support Team. This was something that I brought up at the summit and after some discussion James agreed to be the next representative.

I am not leaving the support team or the WordPress community. 😉 I get too much satisfaction from helping people and participating with this group. All of us collaborate online, but together at a WordCamp is a blast and we get a lot done.

I know James will do a good job. He's already a key member of the support team and working with him will continue to be great.

James' advice to new contributors:

"Start by answering the questions you're comfortable with, things you have encountered or done before. If you just look closely, you'll find a lot, because everyone experiences WordPress differently.

Don't think that you don't know anything. You'll be surprised by how much you do know, when you start to find others who don't know what you know."

Support forums contributor, main ingredients

- patience
- willingness to help others
- dedication to the project's needs over your own agenda

Advice to new contributors:

“There are things you never even realise are there as a user, even as a dev to some extent. But once you go through all the strings and what's more — try to make sense of them (because some dev specific language is very hard to translate) — you end up learning what WordPress can do and about features you never knew were there.”

Plugin Translations on WordPress.org

Howdy plugin authors!

In case you haven't heard, WordPress.org will be expanding the services we provide to you, offering language packs to all plugins. This post is to outline exactly what the plan is and when your plugin will take part.

For a bit of background, see this post on make/meta and this one on make/themes.

Over the past few months, the meta team has been working behind the scenes to enable language packs for themes and plugins, just like the ones core has. Language packs on WordPress.org are powered by translate.wordpress.org and the polyglots team, who translate WordPress.

As of today, all themes have been imported into translate.wordpress.org and can take advantage of language packs (see also). We chose to import themes first to work out any weirdness with translate.wordpress.org, which has never seen this many projects. There were a few bumps along the way, but language packs are now flowing for themes and we've added a number of improvements to translate.wordpress.org to make it the process easier for translators.

Now, it's time to do the same for plugins.

My leave and Bridget Willard, co-team rep for Marketing

Hey all, just in case you didn't see I'll be out on leave until the end of November, and won't be checking Slack so make sure you direct any questions to #marketing in Slack. I'm excited to see what everyone gets accomplished while I'm out! I'm sure it will be great.

I'm sure it comes as no surprise that Bridget Willard @gidgey is being promoted to co-team rep for Marketing and primary team rep in my absence. She's been doing an amazing job and we're lucky to have her time!

If you're interested in getting more involved in .org Marketing, there's always room for more leaders and doers!

Let Bridget know in the comments if you'd like to become more involved on the team so she can chat with you about taking the lead with meetings, notes, wrangling specific subgroups and/or projects. All we ask are consistency in your dedication and thoughtfulness in your communication – give what time you can, regularly, and let others know when you can't. 🙂

I'll see you in a few months!

WordPress 4.8 “Evans”

Posted June 8, 2017 by Matt Mullenweg. Filed under Releases.

An Update with You in Mind

Gear up for a more intuitive WordPress!

Version 4.8 of WordPress, named “Evans” in honor of jazz pianist and composer William John “Bill” Evans, is available for download or update in your WordPress dashboard. New features in 4.8 add more ways for you to express yourself and represent your brand.

Though some updates seem minor, they’ve been built by hundreds of contributors with you in mind. Get ready for new features you’ll welcome like an old friend: link

Bio/Description

I started my career with office work, earned a teaching degree, but returned to the office where I carved out a career in social media and marketing. For two and a half years, I built the GiveWP brand and am now a freelance marketer.

I am the co-host of WPblab, a show on the WPwatercooler network, co-organizer of Women Who WP Meetup, and Team Rep on the Make WordPress Marketing Team.

Advice to new contributors:

"Use situational awareness; listen more at first. Observe how people interact. Ask questions instead of making statements. Volunteer to do something with somebody. Easy one: offer to take notes."
